en field running and Rupert played up to form. Smith and Hastings, two second year men, proved to be capable ends. Lowe made a good impression on the line and Hunter held down left tackle satisfactorily.

The most outstanding player on the Loudonville aggregation was Bernhard, the quarterback. The way he managed his team and judged his plays would have done credit to many a quarter on a team representing a much larger school. Kaylor is probably the fastest man on the visiting team. At one time he ran back a punt for forty yards and nearly broke through the Ashland defense. Carey also next point was that the worthless man is not worth while. "The Worthless man is a dead man," he asserted.

Next, he classified the worthless man as to the characteristics which brand him as a worthless man. The first worthless man, he said was the man who was given over to pleasure. He went on to say that the second class was the man who spent all of his time in dressing. "The man without any business is the third class," he said. He elaborated beautifully upon these classes giving the details of each class as he went. At the close of the talk, he spent a small amount of time in admonishing the students to shun these characteristics and to seek a higher ideal in life.
