

Amorous Student Robes Cluster

The impassive cluster light given as a memorial by the Class of 1921 and placed in a most proper position before the Administration Building has suffered indignity.

The decorous light was found one morning recently to have its subtle Grecian lines obscured under the crass folds of an ignominious blanket.

Some philandering student whose wont it is to surfeit himself upon each reluctant moonbeam during the placid September evenings viewed with disgust the artificial light of man and forthwith resolved to subdue its rays so that the mellow sweetness of the moonlight might lend the atmosphere of romance to the rugged pines which garland the campus. Hence the guileless lamp on this particular morn bore mute testimony to the bland opprobrium of the amorously inclined.

It appears that as long as the lamp sheds its rays vicariously there is no sentiment opposed to its operation. But when the moon beams in all its splendor the manufactured rays of electricity become discrepant and the cause of disconcertation and ululations on the part of the evening strolling undergraduates.

At least at the sight of the blanket-draped lamp the disinterested observer is excited to risibility.

PROF. WOLFORD GIVES INTERESTING CHAPEL TALK

Prof. Wolford gave an interesting and helpful chapel talk Tuesday morning. His theme was the conservation of our gains while we are in college. He drew a picture of a hunter who wasted the game which he secured in his hunt. From this, he showed how many people throw away the things that they have worked hard to gain. "Too often in life, we throw away the gains we have won," he asserted in the course of his talk. His next step was to tell how many college students throw away the things that their parents have gained by wasting their time while they are in college. "It is a greater crime by far to waste the gains of others than to waste our own gains." The opportunity to go to college is a privilege which we are able to enjoy only through centuries of sacrifice and if we are not careful we are going to waste the accumulation of the race. "We should be careful lest we cast aside the very inheritance of the race," he said. "Let us be careful lest we, like the hunter, cast aside the gains which we ourselves and our ancestors have spent much time and energy in gaining," Prof. Wolford admonished in closing.

PROF. HAUN SPEAKS IN CHAPEL

"Students of Ashland College are responsible for the type of life produced in this institution," said R. R. Haun, Professor of Mathematics in a Chapel talk

GARBER GIVES GOOD ADDRESS

Dr. L. L. Garber, Head of the Department of English and Education, briefly discoursed to the students in Chapel last week upon certain "Maxims of Conduct." The address was illuminating and concrete—two characteristics which are always found in any talk of Dr. Garber's.

The speaker descanted upon the number of common fallacies which the student must be careful to avoid. He referred the undergraduate to the Beatitudes and suggested that they must particularly hunger and thirst after righteousness and knowledge.

Four rules were given as aids to development:

- (1) Develop passion for perfection.
- (2) Develop the critical habit.
- (3) Look forward to more money, by better work.
- (4) Desire to have your life large, full and rich.
- (5) Eliminate distraction.
