SCHOOL SPIRIT

Possibly the most hackneyed topic for editorial dissertation in college weeklies is the subject of School Spirit. A less archaic title that would have stimulated the intellect of the reader might have been chosen, but it is the Editor's choice to speak of this old subject as directly and as pointedly as possible, hoping that the very directness will lend cogency to the subject.

Speaking first from a social standpoint, it is the truth that no organization can hope to possess the potency that it requires unless the individuals in that organization have a common spirit which lends enchantment to the activities in which it is engaged. This spirit makes tedious duties a pleasure, pervades consciousness with the satisfaction of tasks well accomplished and gives inspiration for visions of the dim future when even greater accomplishments will be possible. Students often undertake duties, which require time and sedulous attention, with willingness, hoping that at the end of their course they will have bequeathed to their Alma Mater some worth while remembrance that will aid their college to further development. Others fail to apprehend the spirit and ooze through their course, receiving but giving naught. The sluggards never know what they have missed. They inadvertently pass the door of opportunity with the smug assurance that they have done their part if they have only applied themselves, in some measure at least, to their studies.

In the large university there is but little need of the mass of students lending their utmost efforts for the benefit of the Alma Mater.

Parnassus Breezes

BY G. K. STONE

SEXTAINS

Perhaps 'tis a brutality
To camouflage reality
By these bombastic pyrotechnics showing
our mentality;
It is an eccentricity
To have such great felicity.
Of honeyed speech that words flow out like galloping 'lectricity.

The poets of antiquity
Were free from this iniquity,—
It doubtless was because of their great maxular obliquity.
The natural intensity
Of their excrecent density
Reveals the handicap of smaller cranial immensity.

Dumb-bells with injured vanity
Proclaim their scant urbanity
When they denounce these strophes with expressions of profanity:
We chuckle with impunity
Rememb'ring our immunity
Though pasquinated by the ire of the entire community.

The secret of verbosity
And every like atrocity
Is really very obvious—it's pure impetuosity.
In absolute humility
We'll say that our ability
Depends entirely on the law of vocable utility.

Appropriate Caption

In the Bucyrus, (O.) Daily Forum, we notice the following caption: "Alleged Booze Seller Caught." The phrase "Alleged Booze" is aptly descriptive.

The Rolling Stone

"The Rolling Stone" is the name of the new column in the Wooster Voice, which, it is averred, is now being steered by one Jay Dee. Salutations, Jay, Dee, your column contains some mighty good stuff. However, just one small carp for you. We notice that the make-up man has neglected to put quotation marks around your aphorism: "We may not gather any moss but we take a heck of a polish." Of course, authorities differ as to the true authorship of this epigram but it is usually attributed to either Jonah or Cain.

Notice

We have not yet succeeded in eliciting the response of any would-be contributor. Remember this column is open to anyone who wishes to take advantage of it. (Joke). Our editorial office is located on the second floor of the Administration building. Office hours: 2:00 to 2:15 on
