

Gifford Pinchot Forest Ranger Roll Call

History – The Gifford Pinchot National Forest is located in southern Washington State and covers more than one million acres of forested land that extend from Mt. Rainier National Park to the Columbia River. It represents one of the oldest national forests in the country and was called the Columbia National Forest from 1908 to 1949. In 1949 it was named after American forester and politician Gifford Pinchot, who served as the first head of the U.S. Forest Service in 1905.
