

RANGER ROLL CALL

Medicine Bow Routt National Forest

Thunder Basin National Grassland

History

By an Act of Congress approved March 4, 1907, the forest reserves were renamed "national forests", thus resulting in the creation of the Park Range, Medicine Bow, Sierra Madre, and White River National Forests. Portions of the current Routt National Forest contained portions of these four "early" national forests as well as portions of the Hayden, Colorado, and Arapaho National Forests, and Rocky Mountain National Park.

The idea, in the early 1900s, of setting aside Forest Reserves caused great concern among many local citizens and leaders. In theory the forest reserves were just that: stands of commercially valuable timber being set aside to be patrolled against fire, cropped scientifically and otherwise looked after by the Forest Service an agency of the federal government set up as a bureau with the Department of Agriculture. Actually, at least in northwestern Colorado and southeastern Wyoming – the reserves included large acreages of land suitable for both homesteading and grazing. President Theodore Roosevelt was not only conservation-minded but he, by virtue of his hunting trips through northwestern Colorado, had firsthand knowledge of some of the conditions. In spite of numerous local objections Forest Reserves were brought into being by Presidential proclamation. Establishment of federal Forest Reserves and the Forest Service was generally supported nationally by those who wanted effective wildfire control, better protection of the watersheds and federal forestlands. However, establishment of the Forest Reserves also created a loss of local control and loss of opportunity for many, particularly within the livestock industry, timber and wood cutting industry, some of the miners, and general businesses located in and around the counties and communities of northwestern Colorado.

Therefore, the early on Forest Rangers and their successors were expected to be effective spokespersons and leaders implementing policy and forest use changes that many local leaders and forest users disagreed with and/or often felt great anger about. What made people angry was not only the feeling of lost opportunity but a feeling of disrespect for them as land stewards when they felt they had demonstrated their ability to care for the land and the resources their livelihood depended on.

As an example, the Commercial Club of Steamboat Springs and the Businessman's Association of Hot Sulphur Springs passed and sent resolutions that protested against the establishment of Forest Reserves and denounced them as "unjust and unfair and harmful to the best interests of their counties". They felt withdraw of forest reserves will cause no less than great calamity to their counties impeding growth and forever preserving the natural development and settlement. Editor of the Steamboat Pilot Charles Leckenby's added "this is semi-socialistic nonsense."

Obviously, the establishment of the Forest Reserves brought considerable controversy to the affected communities and added to the challenge many of the early rangers faced. The following quote from J.H. Ratliff Routt National Forest Ranger in 1906 reflects some of the challenge.

"I furnished my own horses, paid my own expenses, left my wife to run the ranch and started to ride. I had about twenty-five arguments a day and lost about half of them".

Medicine Bow National Forest

The Medicine Bow National Forest dates back to May 22, 1902, with the establishment of the Medicine Bow Forest Reserve by President Theodore Roosevelt. In 1929, the former Hayden National Forest along the Continental Divide was added. The Pole Mountain Unit between Laramie and Cheyenne was formally administered by the War Department. In 1959, the area formerly used by the military was added to the Medicine Bow National Forest, and in 1961 all military interests in the Pole Mountain District were terminated.

The origin of "Medicine Bow" is legendary. The generally accepted version is that the Native American tribes which inhabited southeastern Wyoming found mountain mahogany in one of the mountain valleys from which bows of exceptional quality were made. It became the custom of friendly tribes to assemble there annually and construct their weapons. At these assemblies, there were ceremonial powwows for the cure of disease which, in the hybrid speech that developed between the Indians and the early settlers, was known as making—medicine. Eventually, the settlers associated the terms "making – medicine" and "making bow", and Medicine Bow resulted as the name for the locality. Later the name gained worldwide renown through Owen Wister's novel "The Virginian".

Routt National Forest

The Routt National Forest is named in memory of Colonel John N. Routt, the last territorial governor and first State governor of Colorado. In 1905 President Theodore Roosevelt proclaimed the Park Range Forest Reserve in Northwest Colorado and in 1908 he changed the name to honor the former governor. The Routt National Forest occupies a unique setting in Northwest Colorado. The forest is between two internationally recognized destination sites—Rocky Mountain National Park and Dinosaur National Monument. It's also home to the world-famous Steamboat Ski area. The Continental Divide follows the Park Range from the Wyoming border to Rabbit Ears Pass, a popular summer and winter recreation area. The forest is surrounded by historic and modern ranches and evidence of past cultures, including the Ute Indians.

The Continental Divide follows the Park Range from the Wyoming border to Rabbit Ear Pass,

The Routt National Forest has diverse topography consisting of high plateaus, rolling foothills and mountains. The climate can be summarized by the statement "long, snowy winters and short cool summers". Elevations exceed 13,000 feet in some location. The Routt National Forest manages four Congressionally designated Wilderness areas: Never Summer, Sarvis Creek, Flat Tops and Mount Zirkle, all of which offer superb hiking opportunities. The Forest also provides for livestock grazing, timber production, and other forest products including Christmas trees, firewood, ferns, and mushrooms.

Thunder Basin National Grassland

Thunder Basin National Grassland (TBNG) was initiated in 1934 as the Northeastern Wyoming Land Utilization Project under the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. The program also has been administered by the Farm Security Administration, Bureau of Agriculture, and the Soil Conservation Service. The lands were transferred from the Soil Conservation Service to the Forest Service in 1954. In 1960, the area was designated as the TBNG with permanent National Forest System status. The Grassland was subdivided into three units for grazing administration, each unit having a grazing association. These associations were established during the mid-1930's and have been in effect since that time. In 1987 the TBNG was combined with Laramie Peak Ranger District into the Douglas Ranger District.

At first glance, the Thunder Basin National Grassland appears quiet and empty, a land dominated by sky and wind, stretching from horizon to horizon; yet a closer look reveals a surprising diversity of landforms, vegetation, and wildlife. It occupies over 572,000 acres in a mosaic of state, federal, and private lands totaling over 1.8 million acres. Lands managed by the Forest Service, Bureau of Land Management, Wyoming State Land Board are open to many public uses. Numerous roads cross the Grassland. However, many do not provide legal access to public land. Many private land owners are willing to permit use of their roads or land to hunters, campers, bird watchers, or hikers, but to avoid trespassing land owners' permission must be obtained before using these roads. Not all private land is fenced, so care must be taken to determine the land ownership of the lands people want to visit. Most old buildings, corrals, or structures are located on private land and should not be disturbed.

Discontinued National Forests

Sierra Madre National Forest was established as the Sierra Madre Forest Reserve by the U.S. Forest Service in Wyoming on November 5, 1906 with 370,911 acres (1,501.02 km²). It became a National Forest on March 4, 1907. On July 1, 1908 the entire forest was combined with Park Range National Forest to create Hayden National Forest and the name was discontinued.

Park Range National Forest was established as the Park Range Forest Reserve by the U.S. Forest Service in Colorado on June 12, 1905 with 757,116 acres (3,063.94 km²). It became a National Forest on March 4, 1907. On July 1, 1908 the entire forest was divided between Routt National Forest and Hayden National Forest and the name was discontinued.

Hayden National Forest was established by the U.S. Forest Service in Colorado and Wyoming on July 1, 1908 with 454,911 acres (1,840.96 km²), mostly in Wyoming from Sierra Madre National Forest and part of Park Range National Forest. On August 2, 1929 the entire forest was divided between Medicine Bow National Forest and Routt National Forest and the name was discontinued.

In the early years apparently some Rangers had one or more collateral duties i.e. a Ranger may be considered the district administrator but also the leader or manager for counting on livestock for the Forest-wide range program; tree planting or cruising timber in the Forest-wide timber program. Sometimes the collateral duties were with an adjacent Forest such as investigating a timber trespass. As duties for an individual changed or shifted the Ranger would often remain in the same office location. Therefore, there was overlap between Rangers operating out of the same office but with responsibilities different than they may have been a year or two before.

Routt National Forests Ranger Districts

Supervisor's office located in Steamboat Springs, CO

By 1907 Ranger Districts had been set up and manned as follows:

District # 1, Known as the Kremmling District, ran from Base Line to Muddy Creek Divide east of Gore Summit;

District #2, The Grizzly Creek Area, included the forest area in North Park from Muddy Creek Divide to the Wyoming State line;

District #3, Known as the Yampa District, extended from the Base Line to Service Creek on the Yampa River side;

District #4, The Steamboat District, extended from Service Creek to Mad Creek;

District #5, The Hahns Peak District, included the country north of Mad Creek to the head of the Encampment River, west through Columbine to California Park and south to the Forest Boundary;

District #6, Included the Bears Ears country south of the Snake River Divide and west of California Park;

District #7, District 7, The Counting Station District, included the Snake River slope west of Columbus Mountain;

District #8, District 8, Included the head of the South Fork of Snake River. The Encampment River area, originally part of District #8, was transferred to the Hayden National Forest in 1908.)

(The south and east fringes of North Park were in Arapaho and Colorado forests, respectfully, until 1930.

According to Ray Peck many of the early Rangers were assigned to districts to establish their position and grades but were actually used as project men on timber surveys, boundary surveys, land classification, improvement construction, etc.)

By approximately a decade later additional Ranger Station's were constructed. The 1921 Routt Forest map shows twelve ranger stations located on the forest. Starting with the old, numbered districts, the stations names, and locations were as follows:

District 1: Pass Creek Ranger Station. Section 21, T2N, R82W; near the forest boundary just north of Pass Creek. Location was on Kremmling District, Arapaho NF, and Middle Park now Parks District. This station no longer exists.

District 2: Grizzly Creek Ranger Station. Section 28, T7N, R82W; near the forest boundary just south of Jackson County Road 24. Location was on North Park, now Parks District.

District 3: Eagle Rock Ranger Station. Section 18, T2N, R84W; west of Eagle Rock near the section center. Location was on Yampa, then Gore, and now Yampa again. This station no longer exists.

District 4: Five Spruce Ranger Station. Section 20, T5N, R83W; north of highway 40 near the head of the Bear Creek drainage was initially in the Steamboat District. By 1957 the name had changed to Rabbit Ears Guard Station. Location was on the Gore, now Hahns Peak Bears Ears. This station no longer exists.

District 4: Buffalo Pass Ranger Station. Section 27, T7N, R83W; near Forest Road 60, just west of Buffalo Pass was originally in the Steamboat District. By 1957 the name had changed to Summit Guard Station. Location was on the Gore, then Hahns Peak, and now Hahns Peak Bears Ears. This station no longer exists.

District 5: Seed House Ranger Station. Section 2, T9N, R84W; near Forest Road 400. Location was on Hahns Peak, and now Hahns Peak Bears Ears. It is now a guard station.

*District 5: Hahns Peak Ranger Station. Section 26, T10N, R86W;
This location is now under water in Steamboat Lake.*

District 5: Summit Creek Ranger Station. Section 25, T11N, R86W; just west of Forest Road 129. Location was on Hahns Peak, and now on Hahns Peak Bears Ears. It is now a guard station.

District 5: Whisky Park Ranger Station. Section 27, T12N, R86W; in Whisky Park near road Junction of Forest Roads 508 and 550. This station no longer exists.

District 5: California Park Ranger Station. Section 3, T9N, R87W; in California Park immediately west of Routt County Road 80. Location was on Hahns Peak and Bears Ears Districts. It is now on Hahns Peak Bears Ears. It is now a guard station District 6: Bears Ears Ranger Station. Section 28, T9N, R88W; about a mile inside the forest boundary along the North Fork Elk Head Creek. Location was on Bears Ears and now on Hahns Peak Bears Ears. This station no longer exists.

District 7: Counting Ranger Station. Section 3, T10N, R90W; about three miles west of the forest boundary. This station no longer exists.

The Mad Creek Guard Station did not show on the 1921 Routt Forest map, though it was apparently built in about 1907 by Ranger James Harry Ratliff.
