Concert given

Richard Ellsasser, who some critics have called the Paganini of the concert organ, presented a concert in Chapel Tuesday evening as part of the year's Artist Series.

Beginning with three early compositions for organ, Ellsasser continued his program featuring the works of Handel, Schumann, and J. S. Bach. After an intermission, Ellsasser played compositions by Clokey, Karg-Elert, and himself. His composition was "Scherzo on Mendelssohnian Themes."

Prof. Vernon Reeder of the Ashland College Music Department, submitted a theme to Ellsasser, who improvised on it. He had not seen the theme before, and played a 15-minute composition from Reeder's original theme.

Ellsasser has recorded for MGM records, Kapp, Sacred Records, RCA Victor, and Lion Records. He is featured on NBC five times a week and has recently finished the score for the motion picture "Nightfall."

Tommy's education because of the advanced architecture here and as his mother jokingly put it, "he is kind of emotional and could not take British fog."

There is a great difference between the poor people and the rich in Korea because there is no middle class. It is felt that within another 10 years things should be a lot better off for the poor people of his country. Unfortunately, he feels we will not see the uniting within our lifetime of the two Koreans.

In his stay here, he learned much about our way of life. Tom has been disappointed by such things as "some college students just don't think. Other people throughout the world seem to look at life philosophically. Americans don't seem to think about life seriously. Money talks very much in America, and it is important and it seems almost everything can be done by money."

Youk was impressed at how well mechanized our country is. "Everything is so well arranged in this country and everyone looked toward the future as happy."

In ending, Tommy added, jokingly, that what he will miss most about this country is American cigarettes. "They are the best things in the world. I am worried about how I am going to get them after I get back to my country."

Students and faculty present satirical "Stunt Night"

Students and faculty alike jammed and overflowed the Little Theater (seating capacity—275; audience—about 310) Sunday evening, Feb. 17, for an hour-long program satirizing themselves and their college. The student half of the program, which was patterned after TV's "Candid Camera," sneaked a peak into the lives and activities of Ashland professors and staff. The picture on the far right shows Phil Hamilton, the narrator, interviewing Hank "Professor Amas" Geary, the astronaut. The remaining pictures are of the faculty side, titled "That Was the Semester That Was." On the left, Dr. Snyder and Prof. VanOsdall team up for some musical humor, while in the center, Dr. Snyder solos on a number titled "Glory, Glory, Glenn L. Clayton." His gray wig amused everyone, including Dr. Clayton.

All the new styles in flats, heels, ties, pumps, and loafers.
